Typical of the massive flocks of waterfowl which winter in the Louisiana marshes. The state's hundreds of thousands of marshland acres play host to millions of ducks and geese each winter. Considered one of the most important wintering states for waterfowl in the country, Louisiana also winters the majority of the continent's population of blue and snow geese. More liberalized duck hunting regulations for the 1963-64 hunting season are certain to bring about renewed interest in the traditional sport of waterfowling and accelerate interest in supporting programs aimed at improving both nesting and wintering areas.
